Point of Privilege Journalized

During announcements, on a point of personal privilege, Senator Plunkett addressed the Chair, and on motion of Senator Vyhovsky, his remarks were entered into the Journal.

“Mr. President,

“I’ve heard 'due process' talked about a lot over the past few weeks. And my cold lawyer's heart grew three sizes when I heard that phrase elevated to the status of a rallying cry.

“It has been said that due process is the cornerstone of our justice system, the promise we make to every person who stands before the law. This week, that promise was kept, and we saw that even lawyers and judges can be heroes.

“But I rise in warning: due process is not a law unto itself—it is a question to ask; it is a question to ask when a law is enforced — the question of 'What process is due?' — usually in very difficult circumstances. At those times, it is easy to fall back on procedures, and regulations, and policies; to simply read what is written and not think about the substance behind the process.

“And if I may read from a text, Mr. President? 'The sad truth is that most evil is done by people who never make up their minds to be or do either good or evil.' That was Hannah Arendt.

“Vermont has made up its mind.

“Vermonters know that the process to become a citizen should embody our nation's promise of freedom, and we know it should not be corrupted into a dishonest undue process that walks our friends, our neighbors, our guests, our workers, into jail.

“So, we must resist the temptation to let 'due process' alone define our actions. Injustice often thrives not through overt malice, but through unthinking acts of power without reflection. Instead, we must ask if every step we take is guided by the principles of fairness, liberty, and humanity. That is the process that is due.

“Thank you, Mr. President.”
